

Shoes have taken unto themselves more Conservative Styles

BY ADELE MENDEL.

Surely it is no exaggeration to affirm that the well-dressed woman pays just as much attention to her footwear as to her hats and gowns. The American woman has always been the envy of her foreign sisters for her well-shod foot. One often hears the expression "glove-fitting," but no glove ever fit better than the American shoes of today, which give the appearance as though the "foot were melted and poured in." Yes, snugness is one feature, conservatism and comfort are others of this season's footwear.

Through some novelties are shown, shoes inclined to simple styles, relying more on line and good leather than on ornamentation.

There are three pairs of black boots sold to one of fancy colors, though of course black shoes with topplings of neutral cloth, buckskin or white calf, come in for their share of honor. Plain leather, patent kid with cloth of black matt kid tops, with medium toes, high arches, rather high "Spanish Louis," "Louis" of leather Cuban heels will have the call.

Understanding the audacious short skirts, boots are high, some reaching to a height of eight inches. Which shall it be, button boots, lace boots or those in Russian style. All are in the fashion parade. However, button boots are a trifle in the lead.

A striking shoe in Gypsy pattern has the mate top quarter and vamp piped with white calf. The white buttons are rimmed in black.

A gray top shoe with black patent leather vamp and quarter has black shiny rivet buttons. The buttonholes are worked in silk.

Boots introducing perforated leather trimming have been accorded recognition by the ultra-fashionable. The perforated leather is underlaid with leather in another color. Models showing a white underlay are interesting, but perforated boot tops with black suede underlaid with glossy deep purple or tan leather are adjudged correct for afternoon wear. Bronze boots beaded or plain are liked for restaurant or semi-dress occasions.

A novelty extreme is a Gypsy seam boot with ornamental jet buttons up the front seam and laced on the side. But the fantastic and bizarre have been relegated to the background by the good dressers who put refinement first.

Gold and silver slippers are a practical investment, for they can be worn with any evening gown. Black satin slippers, beaded or plain, and strapped in various ways, are used more than ever. Slippers braided in white, black, blue or gold are one of the advance styles of this season.

Aluminum slippers do not tarnish and spell the quintessence of elegance. The white-glazed kid and bronze slippers are also used for tripping the fantastic too. Irridescent beaded effects, gold and silver Duchess wear buckles, add to the glory of the new slippers.

Vivid green satin slippers are a whim of the moment to wear with black or white frocks. High gold and silver beaded shoes laced up the back or fastened with snappers help to complete the effect of many a gorgeous gown.

If you bestow upon your silk hosiery the right kind of care, they will wear as long as life. First buy a larger size than you wear in other stockings. They will not wrinkle as the silk shapes itself to the foot. Next, be sure that there are no rough edges inside the shoe and always rinse the hose after the first wearing. Never wear silk hose more than twice without rinsing, and, lastly, do not place a hot iron directly over the stocking while ironing; always a soft cloth directly over the hose.

Stockings match the shoes rather than the gown, which is in contradiction to the decrees of last year. Stripe effects predominate in fall hosiery. There is a splendid choice of cross bars, checked and dotted stockings. Black and white effects are still good.

Accordion plaited silk hose in two-tone effects in many combinations still hold their own. Silk hose in black and colors with lace insertion and beaded embroidery are the newest for evening wear. I even saw turtles and lizards worked in beads running up the instep of a pair of new stockings.

The "Jacob Ladder" stockings are an oddity, but nevertheless they have joined the hosiery family. A black silk stock trimmed with pearl buttons and rows of silver stitching ending in silver tassels is an indication of one of the new modes.

Sport stockings of leather mixture, with turned-back cuffs and white woolen stockings with gay stripes, are sure to withstand the onslaughts of wintry blasts for those who indulge in outdoor sports.

A new cut in slippers of a dressy character is a round and rather wide toe, which gives the foot an entirely different appearance. Slippers are often trimmed and designed to match the gown with which they are destined to be worn. For example, a pair of blue satin slippers is garnished with bow knots done in sphinx and jet spangles, repeating the design on the trimming of the gown.

No need to fear rips or runs if you wear the stockings fitted with six-button holes worked on a tape foundation. These buttonholes keep the clasp of the garter in just the right place and are a splendid device for the prevention of tears.

ing to weights and measures was distributed some time ago. In order that all of the schools might be supplied with these books and that the attention of the teachers in the schools might be brought to this subject Superintendent Churchill has written some special instructions to the teachers.

These instructions are printed in the last issue of the book which is now off of the press and will be ready for distribution as soon as the school term begins. The following is the letter to the teachers:

Through the courtesy of the state office of weights and measures, this department has been furnished with copies of this pamphlet to distribute among the teachers of the state. I am sure you will find it a very valuable aid in teaching the subject of weights and measures. You cannot place too much emphasis upon the fact that the state has an exact standard for every measure and for every weight. Children should be taught that the proper way to buy is not by the dollar's worth, but by the weight or by the measure.

One of the most practical plans for teaching these subjects has been worked out in the Portland schools. One room of a building is fitted up as a store room. Along the walls are shelves on which are placed neat rows of packages representing groceries of all kinds. Across the front of the room is a counter. The children representing the customers have seats in the room and the no doubt that a supply of material can be secured free of charge. Through this method many valuable economic lessons can be taught, such as the economical manner of buying, the comparative value of goods, the value of saving the pennies, as well as the nickels and the dimes. The children may also learn to read a scale correctly and to be accurate in measuring.

The state department of education desires to endorse the work of the department of weights and measures, and trusts that through this pamphlet the teachers in our public schools will be enabled to have exact standards for our weights and measures. This section emphasizes the necessity for the purchase of commodities in specific amounts, and we believe that too thorough instruction cannot be given along these lines, in order that the practical benefits derived may be lasting and of permanent value to the boys and girls who are the future purchasers in Oregon.

Pupils from the fourth, fifth and the sixth grades are given exercises in making out bills from a printed price list. In turn they go to the counter with their bills and purchase the goods, paying for the same with money which is secured from one of the school supply companies. One of the most important lessons learned here is that of making change, and of making exact change. All forms of money are used from the twenty-dollar piece down to the penny, and exact change is always required. "Dummy" packages are used instead of real groceries. The leading wholesale houses of Portland, as well as the packing houses, furnish packages which are exactly the same in form as those used in the market. Some of these dummies may be secured from leading manufacturers throughout the United States. For example, the leading chocolate firms will furnish wooden bars exactly representing the chocolate bars in the regular commercial wrappings. All kinds of canned fruits and canned vegetables are found on the shelves in the original wrappings, the cans being empty. Breakfast foods, extracts, spices, hams and bacon and condensed milk are all handled in the same way. Sand is used in place of sugar, salt and a number of other commodities which are sold in bulk. The salesmen are furnished with scales and with exact measuring cups for the articles to be sold in bulk. The seventh and ninth grades are taught Profit and Loss, Invoice, and Trade Discounts. The plan of having the materials in each room has been tried in Portland, but experience has taught them, according to City Superintendent L. R. Alderman, that it is better in the graded rooms to have one room set apart for this purpose and to give a short lesson each day, continuing the course for several months, rather than to have the articles in one room for a short time and then moved to another room.

Every school in Oregon should have such a room, and by taking up the matter with the proper dealers there is
